It was a beautiful day in Arendelle. Queen Elsa was taking a break from her royal duties to spend time with her sister, Anna. They were speeding from the castle on their bicycles.

"First one to the harbor wins!" Anna yelled.

Olaf the snowman ran to catch up. "Wait for me!" he said. "Oooh . . . a butterfly!"

Anna was almost to the harbor when a big wall of ice appeared in front of her. She swerved to avoid it as Elsa rode past, laughing.

"No fair using your powers!" Anna told her.

Just then, Kristoff and Sven walked over. They looked upset.

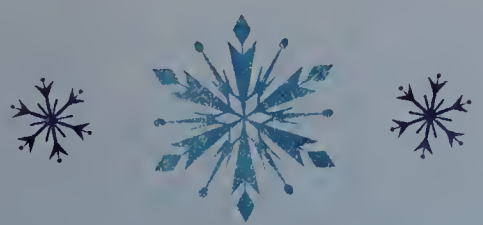
"Sven and I were gathering ice high in the mountains when we saw something huge in the forest!" Kristoff told the sisters. "We tried to get a closer look, but the snow was blowing too hard. Elsa, can you control the snow so we can try to find it again?"

"I suppose I can," Elsa responded. "Do you have any idea what it was?"

"No," said Kristoff. "I thought I knew everything that lived in those mountains, but I guess there are still some surprises up there."

"A new creature? Sounds like an adventure!" Anna said excitedly. "Can I name it?"

"Well, we have to find it first," Kristoff told her.



The sisters hurried to the castle for supplies. On their way back to Kristoff and Sven, they ran into Olaf.

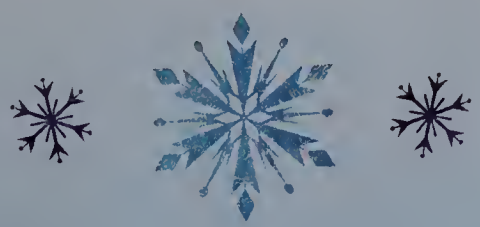
"Where'd you go?" the snowman asked. "I was right behind you, and then there was this butterfly . . ." He noticed that Anna was wearing her cloak. "What'd I miss?"

"We're going monster hunting!" Anna said.

"Oooh!" Olaf cried. "Can I come?"

With Olaf in tow, the friends set off to find the monster. The higher they climbed, the colder it became. Before long, it began to snow . . . hard!

Olaf grabbed Elsa's hands and danced with her happily. Elsa laughed and spun the little snowman around.



"Er, Elsa? We need a little help here," Anna said.

Elsa stopped dancing and turned to see her sister, Kristoff, and Sven covered in snow! She quickly dug them out and parted the storm to clear a path for the rest of their journey.

"Phew, that's better," Anna said, brushing herself off. "Now if only we could find our mysterious friend that easily."

"Are we almost at the spot where you saw the monster, Kristoff?" Elsa asked after they had been walking for a very long time.

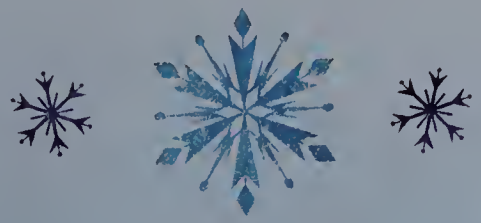
Kristoff and Sven looked at each other. "We . . . uh . . . don't remember," Kristoff admitted.

"Don't remember!" the sisters cried in unison.

"Well, there was a lot of snow," Kristoff explained. "And Sven took a wrong turn."

Sven groaned and nodded in agreement.

"How are we going to find the monster?" Anna asked.



Suddenly, a loud roar shook the mountain. Everyone stopped.

"Wow, Sven. You sound hungry," Olaf said.

"I don't think that was Sven's stomach, Olaf. I think it was the monster!" Anna cried. "Quick! Follow that roar!"

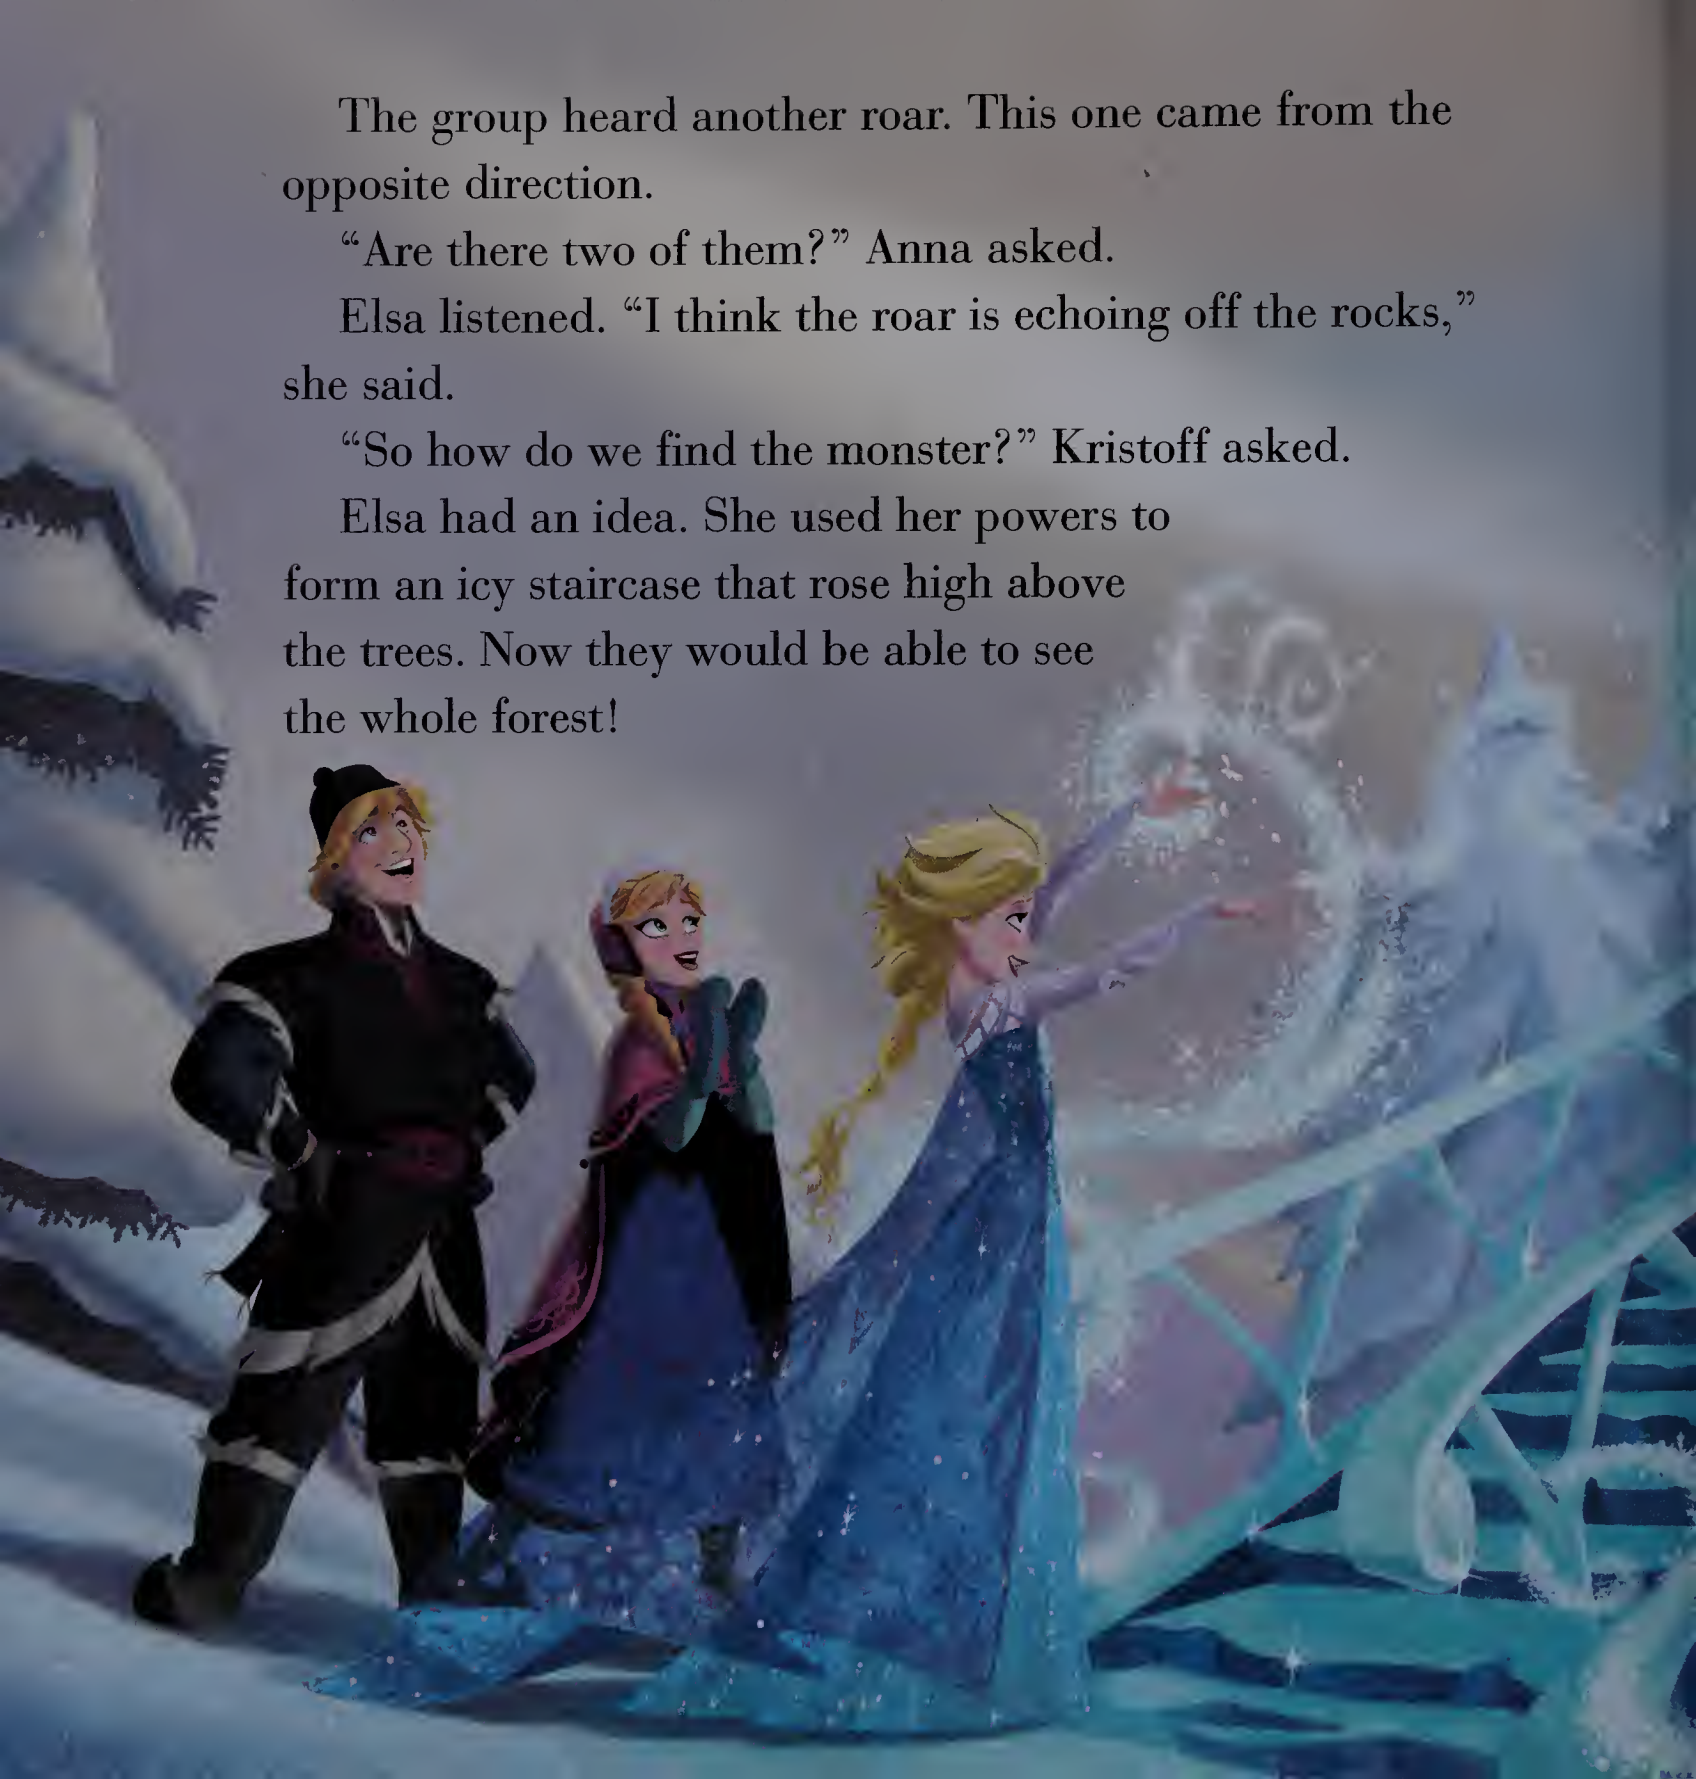
The group heard another roar. This one came from the opposite direction.

"Are there two of them?" Anna asked.

Elsa listened. "I think the roar is echoing off the rocks," she said.

"So how do we find the monster?" Kristoff asked.

Elsa had an idea. She used her powers to form an icy staircase that rose high above the trees. Now they would be able to see the whole forest!



As Anna, Elsa, and Kristoff reached the top of the stairs, there was another great roar.

"Look!" said Anna. "The trees over there moved." She pointed. "That must be where the monster is."

"You mean that patch of trees right by the start of our staircase, where Olaf and Sven are?" Kristoff asked.

"Yep!" Anna said.

At that moment, the trees moved again. The staircase shook. Sven ran behind the nearest tree.

Olaf was distracted. "Hello!" he said to a passing bird.

"Olaf! Look out!" Anna called. But it was too late. The mysterious monster crashed through the trees and stopped right in front of the little snowman.

Olaf looked up. "It's Marshmallow!" he cried.

"Oh, right. Marshmallow! The giant ice monster who tried to attack us!" Kristoff said. "Shouldn't we be running away right about now?"

Olaf gave Marshmallow a hug. "Marshmallow is my friend! How's my little buddy?" he cooed.

"Marshmallow doesn't look very scary anymore," Anna said, and she started down the stairs.

The others followed.

"I think Marshmallow is lonely," Anna said.

Marshmallow nodded.

"I'm sorry, Marshmallow," Elsa said. "I thought you would be happy in the mountains. I wish there was something we could do to help you."

Sven and Kristoff looked at each other. They had an idea.

A few days later, Marshmallow was helping Kristoff and Sven deliver ice.

"Just look at how much more ice we've been able to bring down the mountain!" Kristoff said. "Business is great!"

Elsa smiled. "And Marshmallow seems happy, too!"

Marshmallow nodded and rubbed Sven's and Kristoff's heads. He was glad to be part of the team!
